Team building board game “Cooperation”

"Cooperation" is a practical team building board game created based on the principles of a volleyball game. Teams must be able to agree on a strategy and tactics and implement them on the playing field, competing against each other. Difficulties are caused by opponents' strategic moves and limited time. Those players who will work better together as a team and implement their strategy, will win. Of course, good sportsmanship is also important.

Main results of the game:

- Participants of the game get a successful cooperation experience;
- Participants of the game get to know each other better;
- Participants of the game develop skills to negotiate with other team members;
- The players are aware of their role in a team;
- The players learn how to communicate effectively;
- Participants of the game learn quick and effective decision making skills;
- The players learn to combine their personal tactics with the team strategy;
- The players get a joint adventure.

Game “Cooperation” process

The training is organized as a four-play tournament. Participants change their team in each new play and the rules of the game become more and more complex. "Cooperation" is a dynamic, strategic game with a time limit. The amount of time a team needs to make a move, decreases with every new play. Each team player is responsible for his figure on the playing field and his own decisions. Although the team agrees on a common strategy, the strategy implementation and victory depends entirely on the individual actions of each player. After each play, participants receive a feedback about their actions and analyze the strengths and weaknesses of their team, each time improving their performance.

Practical application of the game

- The game is used as a team building game to improve team collaboration.

Details of the game:

- Game duration – 4-5 hours
- Number of participants – 2-12 people (one set of the game)
